DE ANZA JUMPS THE SHARK:

- Problem #1: Siloed decision making. Too many groups are making decisions that directly and indirectly affect one another without sharing information amongst the groups. There are too many disparate processes for decision making on campus, which causes problems when funding is coming from the same sources.
- Problem #2: Lack of trust. There has been in the past a tendency for senior staff to ram through decisions they want, without seriously considering the input and expertise of the members of the PBTs. Shared governance should be the process through which decisions are made, not a group of “yes people” who simply approve pre-formed plans. Any new governance structure should protect against this tendency.
- Problem #3: Parity in representation. All constituency and affinity groups across the campus community should be included in the decision-making processes in an equitable manner. Individuals should serve on only one committee at a time.
